1900-1912

As the weeks of steady rainstorms turned into months, farmland, cities and towns in the Midwest suffered flooding of historic proportions. The Great Flood of '93 is the second-costliest natural disaster on record in the U.S., causing more than $12 billion in damage.

It was a difficult year for Southern California residents. In the fall, brush fires swept over 200,000 acres, causing about $1 billion damage. In January, an earthquake shook Los Angeles, destroying thousands of homes, closing freeways, and shutting down many schools. The quake, measuring 6.6, caused 57 deaths and an estimated $30 billion damage.

Saying, "I have nothing more to prove," Chicago Bulls star Michael Jordan announced his retirement from the NBA. The announcement ended a roller coaster year during which his team captured another league championship, he was accused of having a gambling problem, and his father was murdered.

Toronto Blue Jay Joe Carter hit a three-run homer in the bottom of the ninth inning of the sixth game of the World Series to defeat the Philadelphia Phillies. The come-from-behind victory clinched their second straight World Championship, four games to two.

A train plunged into a bayou north of Mobile, Ala., shortly after a runaway barge struck the bridge supports, killing 47 in the worst accident in Amtrak's history.

Saying their clients had been influenced by a mob mentality during the 1992 LA riots, lawyers for Damian Williams and Henry Watson won attempted murder acquittals in the Reginald Denny beating trial.

Steven Spielberg's Jurassic Park proved to be popular with moviegoers as it became the highest-grossing movie of all time with $712 million in ticket sales, eclipsing another of his films, E.T.

Late in August, Hurricane Andrew brutalized the south-central tip of Florida and the coast of Louisiana with winds of up to 164 mph, leaving more than 30 dead and thousands homeless. The most destructive hurricane in U.S. history caused an excess of $27 billion in damage in the two states. In Florida, citizens and government officials called for an investigation into shoddy construction practices and building code violations which they claimed contributed to the enormous devastation.

As the number of refugees in war-torn Bosnia increased, the U.N. struggled to end the decimation of Sarajevo, and the starvation of its residents. A war crimes commission was created to investigate atrocities.

Despite having to run a news media of strike course, U.S. military personnel secured Mogadishu, Somalia with relative ease, and Operation Restore Hope began. Lacking the military muscle to end the turf battles between warlords, the U.N. authorized American intervention to restore order to a country whose collapse into anarchy had all but halted efforts to stop the starvation of its people.

It was not a typical presidential election—people voted. Motivated by concerns about a weak economy, unemployment and rising health care costs, Americans stood in lines for hours to say no to President George Bush's bid for a second term, and halted a 30-year decline in the voting rate. Bill Clinton, the governor of Arkansas, and Al Gore, a U.S. senator from Tennessee, were sent to the White House on an electoral-vote landslide. Candidates worked hard to stimulate the interest of the electorate, appearing on morning-news television programs and late-night talk shows, introducing the infocommercial, and campaigning on cross-country bus tours. But, nothing injected more excitement into presidential politics than the billionaire from Texas, third-party candidate Ross Perot—not even Murphy Brown.

Never mind that the setting was virtually the same story told in a new city. Home Alone 2 captured the hearts and the dollars of the holiday season moviegoers anyway, earning more than $31 million opening weekend. Macaulay Culkin delighted viewers as he was once again left alone, this time in New York City, to fend off the lovable bad guys from the first movie, Joe Pesci and Daniel Stern.

After months of build-up and controversy, Spike Lee treated the country to one of the finer movies of the season, Malcolm X. The film, starring Denzel Washington, struggled through out its production because of inadequate financial backing and criticism from black nationalists. In the end, the 3-hr, 21-min. epic was viewed by the critics and the public as a success.

It was difficult to believe, but Earth's number-one super hero, Superman, died. He met his match during a battle with Doomsday in DC Comics' January issue of Superman.

Athletes from 172 nations traveled to Barcelona to compete in the XXV Summer Olympiad. The former Soviet republics were represented by The Unified Team and went home with the most medals, 112. The competition was the last time that members from the former Soviet Union would compete as a team. The U.S. won 108 medals, including a gold medal captured by The Dream Team, rightly named because it consisted of some of the best players from the ranks of the NBA.

After the Summer Games, Larry Bird, who had spent much of the 1991-92 season sidelined because of injuries, decided that his body could take no more and retired from the NBA. Magic Johnson announced that he would end his retirement and rejoin the LA Lakers. On Nov. 2, however, pressures resulting from being HIV-positive forced him to once again take himself out of the game.

It was not a good year for the British royal family. Princess Anne divorced and remarried. Prince Andrew and the Duchess of York, Sarah Ferguson, separated after the Windsor family tired of her public frolics. Prince Charles and Princess Diana ended the fairy tale when it was announced that they had also separated. To top it all off, a spectacular fire in Windsor Castle destroyed the 14th Century St. George's Hall.

Dave Winfield's two-run hit in the top of the eleventh inning clinched the Toronto Blue Jays' 4-3 victory over the Atlanta Braves in the sixth and final game of the 1992 World Series. Toronto's win was the first time that a team outside of the U.S. captured the title.
